the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (19.5% of the population).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century in the White Paper on Ageing Better: Our Future (Department of Health 2000). This sets out a vision of a society in which older people are able to live well, and to contribute to society. It also sets out a number of key objectives for the Government, including:

- to improve the health and well-being of older people;
- to ensure that older people are able to live independently and to participate in society;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities;
- to ensure that older people are able to access the services and support they need.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key areas for action, including:

- health and social care; including: promoting healthy living; preventing illness and disability; providing high quality care; and ensuring that older people are able to access the services and support they need;
- housing; including: ensuring that older people are able to live in their own homes; and providing high quality housing;
- transport; including: ensuring that older people are able to access the services and support they need;
- education; including: ensuring that older people are able to access the services and support they need;
- employment; including: ensuring that older people are able to access the services and support they need;
- leisure and culture; including: ensuring that older people are able to access the services and support they need.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key areas for research, including:

- health and social care; including: understanding the needs of older people; and evaluating the effectiveness of services and support;
- housing; including: understanding the needs of older people; and evaluating the effectiveness of services and support;
- transport; including: understanding the needs of older people; and evaluating the effectiveness of services and support;
